EMPOWER Invest well. Live a little.™

Did you know you can pass your retirement savings to just about anyone?

Log in to tell us who should receive them

It's easy to make sure your retirement plan assets go to the people you want by naming them as beneficiaries of your account. When you add a beneficiary, your assets go directly to them when you pass away, skipping a potentially costly and lengthy court process, and helping to support them during a tough time.

If life circumstances change, your choice of beneficiaries may change. Remember to keep your beneficiary information up to date.

Your beneficiary doesn't have to be a family member.[1] You can add almost anyone as long as you know their:

- Full legal name.
- Date of birth.
- Social Security number.
- Phone number.
- Address.

It's easy — sign in, go to Account, click on Overview, click on Beneficiaries.

Invest well. Live a little.™

› Add a beneficiary to your account today.
Visit empowermyretirement.com.

1 If you are married, your plan may require your spouse to be the beneficiary unless your spouse provides written consent to select an alternate beneficiary. Contact your plan sponsor for specific plan rules.